COVID-19 has affected nearly every aspect of our daily lives. However, there is one thing that hasn't changed -- community associations must still provide services and "pay the bills". This pandemic has presented new economic and legal challenges that have affected community associations' ability to collect the funds they desperately need. Traditional collection practices are not well suited for this "new normal," and some of these practices may prompt governmental and judicial action that no association wants to see or is able to afford. Associations must be willing to think differently and to adjust their policies and perspectives to meet these new challenges. Is your association ready for what's coming and what is already here? We will explore this new reality and discuss specific steps and strategies that will help your association stay financially secure in these turbulent times.
